POETRY

THE MOON OF MARCH.

When the March moon shines, bewarel / There is witchcraft in the air— Magic—mischief—everywhere. Who so falls beneath the spell,

Ghosts and goblins—phantoms pale— Haunt the woods and throng the dale, Rise and pass—and leave no trail! Wailing voices vaguely cry
To the unresponsive sky—
On the lawless wind go by!

Hedge and stump and wayside tres Common things we dealy see, Clothe themselves in mystery, trange, uncanny shapes assume, 'hreatening danger, wrath and doom. Then the Moon-Maid overhead Strand by strand and thread by thread Doth a net of silver spread. Woe unto the luckless wight Who shall feel its meshes tight Drawing round him in the night!

Howsee'er he tug and strain. He shall not be free again— Cobwebs still will cloud his brain! —Arthur Goodenough.

And evermore, from the high barbican, Saluted each returning caravan Lost is that city's glory. Every gast Lifts, with dead leaves, the unknown Pasha's Gust.

And all is ruin-save one wrinkled great."

Thomas Balley Aldrich.
